Dr. Harry Moore, retired Calhoun Humanities Department Chair, has published a book of poems entitled What He Would Call Them. Adam Vines, author of The Coal Life and editor of Birmingham Poetry Review, states "These are poems that know family and landscape and church, poems in which the speaker has shuffled his bare feet on and dug his big toe into the 'hard clay road' he describes, has climbed into the pulpit his grandfather built and arm-wrestled with the mysteries for a spell, has borne witness to the 'clothesline posts [that] make wooden crosses,' and has tasted the names of weeds his father taught him, words 'worn smooth with long holding' that now unspool themselves across 'the green chain of years.' "
